OVER 30 YEARS OF OUTSTANDING NATURE PHOTOGRAPHY

ALASKA TIME

2027 WEEKLY CALENDAR & PLANNER

EDITORS' NOTE

Those who live in or have visited Alaska know it is an amazing place. Our mountain, glacier, coastal, forest, and arctic landscapes are awe-inspiring. Our wildlife populations, both in diversity and numbers, are not found anywhere else in the United States.

This abundance comes from the fact that 90-96% (depending upon the source) of our 665+ million acres are public lands kept in trust for all Americans and preserved for their wildness – a wildness that inspires and draws visitors from all over the world.

These public lands support Alaskan livelihoods. Tourism jobs make up about 48,000 jobs in our state, generating some $5.6 billion annually in economic activity. Public lands also provide vital access for Alaskans to food from fish to wildlife and wild plants and is of particular importance to the culture and subsistence for our Native and rural residents. Of course, artists and photographers can find an unending supply of inspiration from the wild spaces that comprise our public lands and the wildlife that inhabit them.

Despite the importance of our public lands to healthy ecosystems, Alaskans, and visitors, our public lands are under direct assault. From attempts to directly sell them off to private interests to removing hard-fought protections that underwent a rigorous public process, and even undermining or ignoring laws protecting the environment, our public lands are under attack.

That is why we wanted to dedicate this year's edition of Alaska Times to our amazing public lands. Each image was selected not only for its quality and subject diversity, but because it was photographed on city, state, or federal land that is held in trust for all of us. We hope you take inspiration from these photos to be vigilant and work toward ensuring that we all continue to enjoy the wild spaces that our public lands provide.

Sincerely,
Carl Johnson & Michelle Turner
